DETAILED ACTION

1. This action is responsive to communications: Application filed on 06/13/2001
2. Claims 1-15 are pending in this case. Claims 1, 8, and 9 are independent claims.

Priority

3. Receipt is acknowledged of papers submitted under 35 U.S.C. 119(a)-(d), which papers have been placed of record in the file.

Drawings

4. The drawings were received on 6/13/2001. These drawings are accepted.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

5. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(b) the invention was patented or described in a printed publication in this or a foreign country or in public use or on sale in this country, more than one year prior to the date of application for patent in the United States.

6. Claims 1-3, 8, and 9-11 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(b) as being anticipated by Muranaga et al. (hereinafter Muranaga, US Patent Number 5,671,428, issued on September 23, 1997).

Regarding independent claim 1, Muranaga discloses a method in which a document that is to be examined is stored in a document database (Figure 1, item number 4 of Muranaga). Muranaga also discloses a method in which examiners (reviewers or commentators) attributes are also stored in a database (column 20, line 30-column 21 line, 15 of Muranaga). Based on attributes a user may select the examiner(s) that are to review the document at which point the system requests that the examiner reviews the document (column 3, line 18-column 4, line 21 and column 17, line 25-column 20 line, 55 of Muranaga).

Regarding dependent claim 2, Muranaga discloses a method in which the examiner may use a browser to view the document and may input results (comments) about the document, at which point the comments may be viewed by the requester (column 3, line 18-column 4, line 21 of Muranaga).

Regarding dependent claim 3, Muranaga discloses a method in which based on the importance/priority of a document only certain examiners may have full access to the document based upon the priority set forth in their own attributes (column 20, lines 30-67 of Muranaga).

Regarding independent claim 8, the claim incorporates substantially similar subject matter as claim 1. Thus, the claim is rejected along the same rationale as claim 1.

Regarding independent claim 9 and dependent claim 10 and 11, the claims incorporate substantially similar subject matter as claims 1-3. Thus, the claims are rejected along the same rationale as claims 1-3.

Art Unit: 2178

7. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

8. Claims 4 and 12 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Muranaga et al. (hereinafter Muranaga, US Patent Number 5,671,428, issued on September 23, 1997) as applied to claims 2 and 10 above, and further in view of IBM Technical Disclosure Bulletin (hereinafter IBM, published on March 1, 1994).

Regarding dependent claim 4, Muranaga does not disclose a method in which the status of the result is checked and that reminders are sent to the examiner. However, IBM discloses a method in which a document reviewer is sent a reminder of a due date prior to the due date if the review is not completed and sent another reminder when the review becomes overdue (Pages 2-3 of IBM). It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to have combined the methods of Muranaga and IBM because it would have increased the ability of work getting done on time.

Regarding dependent claim 12, the claim incorporates substantially similar subject matter as claim 4. Thus, the claim is rejected along the same rationale as claim 4.

9. Claims 5-7 and 13-15 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Muranaga et al. (hereinafter Muranaga, US Patent Number 5,671,428, issued on September 23, 1997) as applied to claims 1-2 and 9-10 above, and further in view of Pavlov (US Patent Number 6,725,426, filed March 17, 2000).

Regarding dependent claim 5 and 6, Muranaga discloses a method in which the examination results are stored in a database and summed up (list of all comments) and the user is allowed to browse the results (column 10, line 31-column 11, line 39 of Muranaga). Muranaga does not disclose a method in which an XML tag is attached to every phrase in the results or that the original examination file is converted into an XML file. However, Pavlov discloses a method in which word processing documents are converted into XML files (column 1, line 42-column 2, line 15 of Pavlov). It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to have combined the methods of Muranaga with the method of Pavlov because it would have allowed for device independent document and result sharing.

Regarding dependent claim 7, Muranaga does not disclose a method in which a document that is stored is presented as a model when compiling an examination document. However, Pavlov discloses a method in which style rules (stylesheet), grammar rules, and transition rules are used to convert a document from a word processing format to an XML format (column 3, line 48-column 4, line 41 of Pavlov). The rules could be considered to be a model of any document that has already been compiled using the process. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to have combined the method of Muranaga with the method of Pavlov because it would have allowed for a uniform style/format of all documents in the system.

Regarding dependent claims 13-15, the claims incorporate substantially similar subject matter as claims 5-7. Thus, the claims are rejected along the same rationale as claims 5-7.

Conclusion

10. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure:
